their piers. Those policemen were members of the Steamboat squad.

They also stayed late hours when requested to do so, to watch for incoming steamers, to protect steerage passengers and to be on hand for early salings.

"Are these men paid for this work?"

"Yes, sir; they are paid every week. The man on pier 45 so week."

"Who are these officers?"

"The man on pier 45 so O'Neill and on pier 35, Bradsha were in court and were identified soly in the Merchants Hotel in May last, the would not question him in regard to that offense.

He asked him, however, if he did not go to Morris Fark races recently, Sheridan admitted it "Did you meet Lynch there?"

No. sir, I had a day off and went up the police officers ever got passes from the Company, nor did they ever got they every week. The witness did not Pennell every week. The witness did not pen did you meet Lynch there?"

No. sir, I had a day off and went up the for peleasure. "Did you meet Lynch or any of the other men whom he was accused of clubing and who lived in Jersey City. "As a matter of fact, you pay these men because they are policemen and wear a uniform?"

"Yes, that is about it."

Robert P. Reilly, superintendent of the Spanish Transatiantic Steamerhip line, at pier 10, North River, the next witness, said that as indictments were the police man and went up to see that the police of the company of the steamboat squad, was employed for the trucks and passengers when the spanish line. The officer on duty as paid 75 cents a day and allowed to get its mean of the steamboat squad. "In the steamboat squad, was employed for the trucks and passengers when the spanish line. a man detailed. He was needed at the pler to preserve order among truckmen. "You used to be a policeman yourself.

Mr. Reilly?"

"Yes, sir."

"No questions," said Judge Ransom.

The next witness was Peter Lawrence in the shipping department of Carter, Macy & Co., who had no docks, but docked ships on the East and North Rivers in the tea district.

Mr. McLaren said his company paid policemen to look out for ships consigned to them, in loading and unloading. This took from ten to fifteen days, and it was customary to pay $10 for each ship to the police officer in charge of the dock. Sometimes less was paid, but no more if everything was satisfactory.

It was finally admitted on the ground that if such exactions were made, it was an indication of dereliction of duty on the part of the police.

"Well, now, whom do you pay first?" asked Mr. Goff.

"We never pay anything at all till the vessel's cargo is thoroughly discharged."

"Morris wanted $200, but I said I was poor and could not pay him that much. He said he could not get me out of the trouble for less, and told me to go and pawn my things and raise the money. This was after Morris refused to take my case, but Sloan said to him: "Take it; there's money in it."

"Finally I gave Morris 100 and let him go, and engaged August Neutz as my lawyer. The case was tried at Special Sessions, and I had witnesses who testified that they had boarded with me for ten and eleven years, and that there never had been any bad women in my house."

Sluder said that after that Sloan and the captain came around to see him and looked through the house and found it all right. Sloane wanted some money at first, but the witness told him he had nothing to give him.

The house next door, at 255 Elizabeth street the witness said, was kept by a first. Ctrauss, who, Sloan told him, used to pay the police regularly. Mrs. Strauss kept a great many young women and they tried to go in and out at all hours

"To any other officials—those of the Dock Department, for instance?"
Objection was made by ex. Judge Ransom that the Dock Department was not being investigated, but the question was allowed.

"Well, yes, the Company pays something to others," the witness said, but protested that he ought not to be compelled to give information regarding the business of his Company.
